In a single day in November 2018, they facilitated 29 players in their "AI in Poker Club" with a total bet value of S$11,682. The trio pleaded guilty to a charge each under the Remote Gambling Act of providing a Singapore-based remote gambling service, facilitating participation by others in remote gambling on the Pokerrrr2 mobile app.

They invited friends and friends of their friends to join the online poker game using a club code and bought virtual coins that they used to start and host games.

She would transfer the winnings later on via the same method, while the two men took charge of hosting the game and watching to prevent huge losses.

Deputy Public Prosecutor Joshua Lim asked for at least three months' jail and a fine of S$20,000 each, saying that remote gambling is "especially pernicious" for three reasons.

She said her clients are white collar workers who played poker because they enjoyed the game and set up the club just to play with their friends and acquaintances.

There was "no intention at all" to profit from this and the tips they received worked out to about S$182 each, which is "rather insignificant" and
