KU authors should be wary of the fine print. Via Shutterstock.

The Amazon statement explains the new payout:

The author of a 200 page book that was borrowed and read completely 100 times would earn $2,000 ($10 million multiplied by 20,000 pages for this author divided) Tj T* BT /F

We will similarly change the way we pay KDP Select All-Star bonuses which will be awarded to authors and titles based on total KU and KOLL pages read.

Author C. E. Kilgore points out, correctly, that this estimate per page is bonkers.

It's unlikely that most authors will make $10 a page. The average KU author makes $1.40 per KU borrow, and is about to make less.

Kindle Unlimited authors are more likely to make a fraction of a penny per page.

Kilgore breaks down this calculation in a smart blog post:

Their chosen solution, however, may not be enough to draw longer books back into the pool. At a penny per page, that author of a $3.99 250 page fantasy novel is still going to be making less per KU borrow. And, what about the authors in Sci

-Fi and Thriller who sell for $4.99-$5.99, and LGBT romance for $5.99-$6.99? They would still be making less than the 70% royalty rate, and with KU still requiring exclusivity (which is DUMB), I can't see many authors who have left, coming back just because of this change. I know I won't be.

The fake Bvlgari bag is boxier and cheap-looking in general.

Thanks again Cindy Karl 4 days ago Highly recommend! It's my 3rd time now using their service and I have to say their customer service is the best and got my certificates quite quickly.

One of the characteristics that genuinely distinguishes the Bvlgari Serpenti bag is the snakehead clasp.

If you look at the close-up images of the letters on both sides, you'll see that the actual characters are thicker but smaller, whilst the fake letters are much thinner but larger and appear to be shaped differently.
