Cooper signing HB 347 into law, legal online sports betting is officially on the horizon and is expected to launch as early as Jan. Read on to learn about critical moments in North Carolina sports betting history:

June 1, 2023: The North Carolina Senate passes online sports betting bill HB 347, clearing the way for the House to approve changes.

May 30, 2023: The Senate Finance Committee discusses HB 347, which will move to the Senate Rules Committee if it gains approval.

Jason Saine files HB 347, a bill that would legalize online sports betting in North Carolina.

27, 2023: A bill supporting legalized mobile sports betting in North Carolina - allowing for 10-12 sportsbooks - is expected soon.

Tax rates and licensing fees are among the wrinkles to be ironed out before a bill is sent to Gov. Roy Cooper and the Eastern Band of Cherokee submit an amended gaming compact required by the arrival of the new NC sports betting law to the Department of the Interior for review.

Scrolling to the second screen, we finally start to see non-ads. Here's a set of listings labeled "Highly rated" but don't be fooled: These aren't the highest-rated cat beds on Amazon. These are also just ads. Keep on scrolling, and the ads keep coming - even if they're repeats. Amazon might feel unbeatable for service, fast shipping and easy returns. But as a place to find products, it's becoming a tacky strip mall filled with neon signs pointing you in all the wrong directions. I call it the "shill results" business. Even when they contain a tiny disclaimer label - as do Amazon's - these kinds of ads can be misleading because they fill up spaces people have every reason to expect to contain trustworthy, independent information.

But in my experience, Amazon's ads are often not useful, not informative and can make shopping a little bit harder. If you are searching for a cat bed, you have an expectation that Amazon will show you the cat beds that are most useful for you. Not $389 cat beds. Not the pet bed Amazon makes the most money from. Not a weird knockoff.

How everything on Amazon became an ad

Search results are no longer ordered by relevance or what Amazon thinks the "best" product is. When the placement is paid, it should have a "Sponsored" label like this. (Amazon/Washington Post illustration)
