The National Addictions Management Service (NAMS) was set up at the Institute of Mental Health (IMH) in 2008 with the support of the Ministry of Health (MOH) to provide treatment for people with addictions.

At NAMS, we provide treatment and support for addictions to drugs, alcohol, gambling, gaming and others.

In addition to clinical care, our team also conducts research, provides training and works with community agencies to educate the public on addiction issues and actively promote healthy living.

We conduct individual counselling, group psychoeducation, family therapy as well as support group programmes for patients and their family members.

Family counselling supports families in their caregiving role and helps with their patients' re-integration into the community.

NAMS runs an outpatient clinic and an inpatient ward which provide residential services at the Institute of Mental Health.

Addiction management services are also available at the Community Wellness Clinic in Queenstown Polyclinic.
