Marketing is big business. By learning to target products at the right people, companies cut their advertising spend and increase sales. Add to that the focus group world of politics and the media, and it's clear why businesses pay for your opinions.

There are two ways to take part and start earning cash

Focus groups. Traditional market research focus groups pay much more per session

, but you're limited to a few a year. All it involves is giving opinions on the chosen subject (often online via Zoom these days), and you can walk away with anything from $50 to $150. See Focus Groups below for more.

I've made over $800 a year on online surveys, but it does take a lot of spare time and all survey sites were definitely not created equally. If I really busted a gut and did every survey I received I could probably double it.
