1. Know Where You Stand

2. Realize What Went Wrong

Making mistakes every now and then is okay, as long as you're able to learn from your mistakes and take responsibility for your decisions.

Take some time to reflect on the reasons you left your previous job.

Your former supervisor may have no idea why you left. And they will certainly ask why you think they should bring you back.

Explain that you understand their hesitancy in bringing you back, but you want a second chance and a fresh start. Demonstrate that if they rehire you, you're willing to work harder than ever to prove your commitment to the company.

4. Make Your Case in Person

If you can't get rehired in your old job, but you haven't damaged your reputation at the company, consider applying for a job at a higher level-especially if you've been away for a while and have gained new skills.
